SPLOŠNA NAVODILA

IZPITNA POLA 1A (Bralno razumevanje) in IZPITNA POLA 2 (Slušno razumevanje)

- Za slovnične napake in nepravilno napisane besede točk ne odštevamo.
- Napačno napisanih besed, ki se pomensko razlikujejo od pravih rešitev, ne upoštevamo.
- Ocenjevalci bodo po lastni presoji upoštevali tudi smiselno pravilne odgovore, ki niso navedeni v navodilih za ocenjevanje.
- Pri nalogi s kratkimi odgovori ocenjevalci ne bodo upoštevali odgovorov, ki so dolgi šest besed ali več. Skrajšane glagolske oblike z izjemo zveze can't se štejejo kot dve besedi.
- Če je pravilen samo del odgovora, za ta odgovor kandidatu dodelimo 0 točk.
- Če kandidat zapiše dva odgovora, od katerih je en napačen in ni ustrezno označen (tj. prečrtan), se odgovor točkuje z 0 točkami.

IZPITNA POLA 1B (Poznavanje in raba jezika)

V tem delu izpitne pole ocenjujemo poznavanje in rabo jezika, zato ne upoštevamo napačno napisanih besed niti slovnično oporečnih rešitev. Skrajšane glagolske oblike z izjemo zveze can't se štejejo kot dve besedi.

Section A

The expedition to Antarctica

Presenter: No-one really knows what it would be like to live on Mars, but our next guest has more of an idea than most. Dr Alexander Kumar has recently returned from spending eleven months living in some of the toughest conditions in the world. Along with eleven other men and one woman from Italy, France and Britain, he's been enduring the harsh winter at the Concordia research station in Antarctica. Cut off from the outside world braving temperatures of eighty degrees below freezing, they didn't see the sun for three months. The aim was to simulate the conditions which might be faced by astronauts travelling to Mars. When he came to the Outlook studio, Alexander told me more about the members of the team.

AK: I'm a junior doctor and, in fact, I was the only doctor on the station. We had a nurse as well, otherwise there were scientists, a cook, and there were a couple of other technicians and mechanics.

Presenter: And what were you testing? What were the pressures on the people who were there? What were the difficulties that you were trying to see whether you could cope with?

AK: If you look at it from the outside, it's essentially taking a small group of people who don't know one another and, in fact, putting them through one of the worst winters in the world, the nine months of complete isolation in that altered daylight cycle – that's what you'd undergo on long-haul space travel as well. If you're going to go to Mars, it may take eight, eight to ten months, probably around nine – one way. Of course, and you'd have the problems of gravity, so, of course, we don't simulate zero gravity; however, the isolation and the psychology far outweigh the physiology in terms of the challenges and the area of study and the interest it invokes.

Presenter: You said that you hardly knew each other. Had you met at all before you actually ended up on the ice?

AK: We had a short training period together in Paris for four days.

Presenter: And were you sizing each other up, thinking, uhm, I don't know if this person's going to get on my nerves or that person's driving me a bit nuts already?

AK: I think we were all probably still trying to get our heads around the fact that we were going away for a year. In fact, to pack the mind for a year abroad is far far harder than it is to pack, you know, for a week away in the Caribbean.

Presenter: What did you take?

AK: A toothbrush?

Presenter: Ha, ha, ha. The first and most important piece of kit.

AK: Well, I hear the astronauts on board ISS, International Space Station, mended ... did some repair with a plastic toothbrush. You never know.

Presenter: Just describe the conditions in the winter there.

AK: Well, inside the base, the conditions are much the same but you realise it's a bit like flying in a spacecraft. You realise it's night outside when you pull up the shutter on your, you know, aircraft window and it's dark outside. But imagine that goes on for three months, and even you're waking up to that continuously day after day. Going outside the station, in one step you're changing a hundred degrees Celsius – in just one step going from plus twenty to minus eighty degrees below and that's not including the wind chill. Our wind chill far exceeded minus a hundred degrees.

Presenter: My goodness! So, what effect does that have on you when you step outside even if you're wrapped up in the latest kind of thermal clothing?

AK: The longer you spend the higher the risk. So your corneas can freeze, the outer surface of your eye can freeze if you don't look after them. So everything is about prevention, you've got to really dress up almost as if you were going out on an EVA like an astronaut outside of your spacecraft. You've got to zip up, cover each inch of your skin and you've got to be aware that while you're stepping out into ... anything can happen, and down there whatever happens, happens. And as a junior doctor working down there – that was one of the most challenging things. You spend a couple of months trying to figure out, you know, this could happen, what would I do?

Presenter: And if anything had gone wrong during that period, could you've been rescued?

AK: No, I mean, not easily.

Section B

An interview with Sayeeda Warsi

Presenter: Baroness Warsi, whom have you chosen, and, in a nutshell, why?

Baroness Warsi: I've chosen Razia Sultana. She was born around 1205. She ruled around Delhi, in the sultanate around Delhi. She was of Turkish origin, she was Muslim by faith and she was an amazingly radical leader for her time and this was a woman leading, including leading men into battle, 800 years before we had our own great female leader in the UK.

Presenter: The fact is, you described Amar as quite astonishing. When did you first learn about her?

Baroness Warsi: Well, I grew up in lots of stories that Dad told us about Islamic history, about the history of the Indian subcontinent. Uhm, he would...

Presenter: Where did you grow up?

Baroness Warsi: I grew up in West Yorkshire in Dewsbury.

Presenter: Yes yes...

Baroness Warsi: And Daddy would come back from the mills in the evening, we'd all sit down to dinner, family dinner was always important. I was one of five girls, we don't have any brothers, and we grew up really in an environment, where, I think, there was a sense and – possibly my parents felt that they hadn't had their male child, their heir, and – possibly we grew up feeling that somehow, we weren't good enough. And I think, Mom and Dad compensated for that feeling within the community by telling us stories about great leaders from the past, especially great women leaders. But I actually thought, Razia, because she was described as a Turkish princess who ruled in India, I actually thought she was a fairy tale. It was about the same time as reading the brothers Grimm and Hans Christian Andersen. So, I actually thought this was just another fairytale. It was one of a number of fairy tales which my parents told.

Presenter: I suppose a lot of people who are not Muslims would, would imagine that in a Muslim household a story of a woman leader taking a job of a man, wouldn't be the kind of thing that a father would tell his daughter approvingly. Were your family different or do we just have the wrong preconceptions?

Baroness Warsi: I think there is a wrong preconception about Islamic history. Not just within non-Muslim communities. The Muslim community, like many other communities, doesn't have a full and proper understanding of its own history, just like we don't necessarily in this country always have a full and proper understanding of our own history. And there are large parts of it which are forgotten and much of it is very much current and maybe twenty, thirty years from now. But I think ... you know, Dad has, was never... he did the equivalent of A levels before he migrated from Pakistan to here to work. But he was an avid reader, and was a great story teller, and we grew up in a lot of stories about Islamic history and...

Presenter: Do you think, he was trying to encourage you to, to have a sense of independence and of the possibilities, as a woman in life?

Baroness Warsi: He may have been doing, or he may just've been trying to make himself feel better, and say: 'Well, I may not have a male child, but actually, there are women who could do great things as well, and maybe, one of these might turn out to be one of them'. So, whether he was making himself feel better, whether he was just liter[ally] simply passing on knowledge and information or stories, whether he just enjoyed telling stories, or whether he was trying to inspire us, I'm not sure, but something might have worked.

Presenter: Before I bring in our expert witness, can you just try to picture for me the, the mental image that you had of Razia when you were a little girl. How, how did you picture her?

Baroness Warsi: I imagined her in a fairytale gown, possibly pink with lots of jewellery on. And interestingly, I imagined her as being white because I thought that was what princesses look like, with blonde hair, so, I think, if I had to physically imagine Razia Sultana, she was probably the equivalent of what I saw in my fairy tale books. And I genuinely thought it was a fairy tale. I didn't think this was true until many many years later when I realised that so many of the stories that my father was telling me were factually correct.

Presenter: I noticed you call her Razia Sultana, but she liked to call herself Razia Sultan because she wanted to make it clear that she was a sultan rather than the consort of a sultan.
